TROPIC TALKS—Continued.

This is the time of year when many winter residents are leaving South Florida, to escape what they imagine must be unbearably hot weather. It is reasonable to suppose that if the thermometer reaches one hundred in the shade in July at New York or Chicago, any place several hundreds of miles farther south must be fairly sizzling with heat.

It is, however, a fact (which only a year-around resident will accept as such,) that South Florida enjoys a most delightful summer climate, its warmest days tempered by a refreshing sea breeze. Its people do not live in danger of sunstroke or heat prostration.

Each year more and more of our winter folk are experimentally 'spending the summer here, and a majority are convinced that its climate and other attractions are superior to those of northern cities during the same months.
