

Asimov visits campus; promotes solar energy

BILL ASHTON

Managing Editor

The FIU Atheneum was transformed into a spaceship for a brief time Tuesday. The occasion was the visit to the campus of Isaac Asimov.

Asimov, noted futurist, science-fiction writer, doctor in biochemistry, and self-proclaimed genius, spoke to a crowd of close to 400, holding them spellbound with tales of everything from solar energy to Mount Everest. He came out in favor of solar energy, but against Mount Everest.

Actually, Asimov was not against the mountain. He was upset about the treatment of a story he wrote in the early 1950s, theorizing that no one would reach the top of Mount Everest because an alien abominable snowman prevented them from doing so.

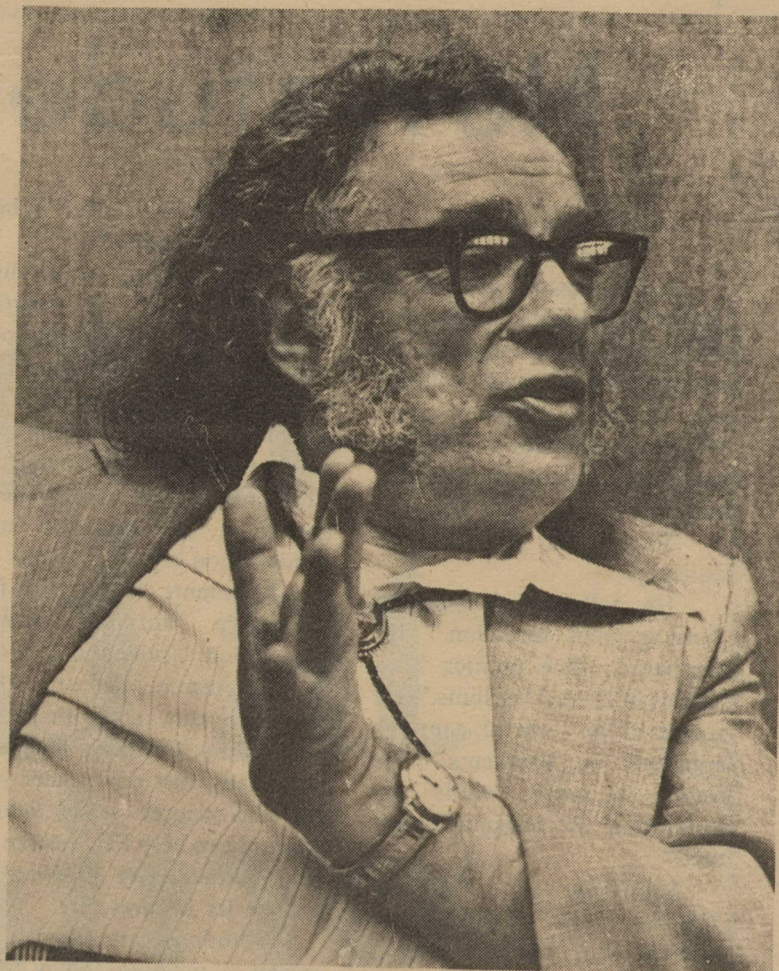

By the time the tale had been set in type, printed, and on the stands, Edmund Hillary and company had climbed to the peak, proving Asimov's theory as invalid as last year's license plate.

Some of Asimov's other theories seem more plausible. He believes that solar energy is the ultimate solution to the energy crisis, proposing that huge solar ray collectors be placed in orbit around the earth. He stresses that orbiting satellites could collect pure solar power 24 hours a day, and that the rays would not be diffused by earth's impure atmosphere.

Asimov said that he sees many uses for space in the future, including nuclear and biological experiments that would be too dangerous to try on Earth. He pooh-poohed critics of the high costs of space exploration, saying "We spend 300 billion dollars a year on the military. We spent $25 billion to put a man on the moon. Which money was better spent? A little more money in the direction of space exploitation could bring great benefits. Besides, we don't have the gasoline for another war."

Asimov, whose 182 published books include "Fantastic Voyage," "The Foundation Trilogy," and "The Gods Themselves," is proud of his works, his typing ability (90 words a minute, with errors), and himself, not to mention the distinction of being the only man ever to predict that Mount Everest would never be climbed - five months after it was.

Commentary and Analysis

This was Tuesday afternoon in a hallway on the fifth floor of the Primera Casa Building. Far away from the bouncing balls and swinging rackets of the tennis court, six young women were sitting here waiting for a decision by the members of the Athletic Appeal Board on the most controversial and costly "grievance" in this university's history. They were no longer a team, broken now by the strain, the distrust and the pain that had been building since their season began last fall.

The 1977 FIU Women's Tennis Team was a distinctly divided collection of athletes, that much is clear. And sitting here, waiting for the Board's decision on whether or not to cancel the season with one match remaining and allow the top three players to represent the university at the state championships, one could plainly see the tension. The bitterness. The pain of a fallen team.

The coach, Karren Newman, looked drawn and lost. Three weeks of meetings, interviews, accusations and pressure had taken their toll. Perhaps she wondered what had gone wrong -- why did such a supposedly fun sports activity end up like this? She was silent, standing there, lost in her thoughts.

Rose Brown, Linda Kavanagh and Jill Dubman sat on one couch outside the meeting room. In three short weeks they had appeared on all four local television stations, the newspapers and on radio complaining about their coach, her decision to end the season, FIU Athletic Director, Tom Wonderling, Linda Miscovic (FIU Women's Sports Coordinator) and the fact that they would not get the opportunity to play in the state

Linda, or Jill. FIU will gain nothing but bad publicity from it."

These were the "stars" of the team. The three "top" players. The "best." They had succeeded in bringing more publicity to FIU's Athletic Program since this university opened its doors some five years ago. To be sure, however, they had brought the media out

Women (AIAW), of which FIU is an active member, has a code of ethics for their athletes. It reads as follows:

- (1) Respect differing points of view.
- (2) Respect and accept the decisions of the coach. When ethical decisions are questionable, the participant should direct her questions to

(4) Recognize and value the contribution of each team member.

(5) Keep personal disagreements away from practices and contests.

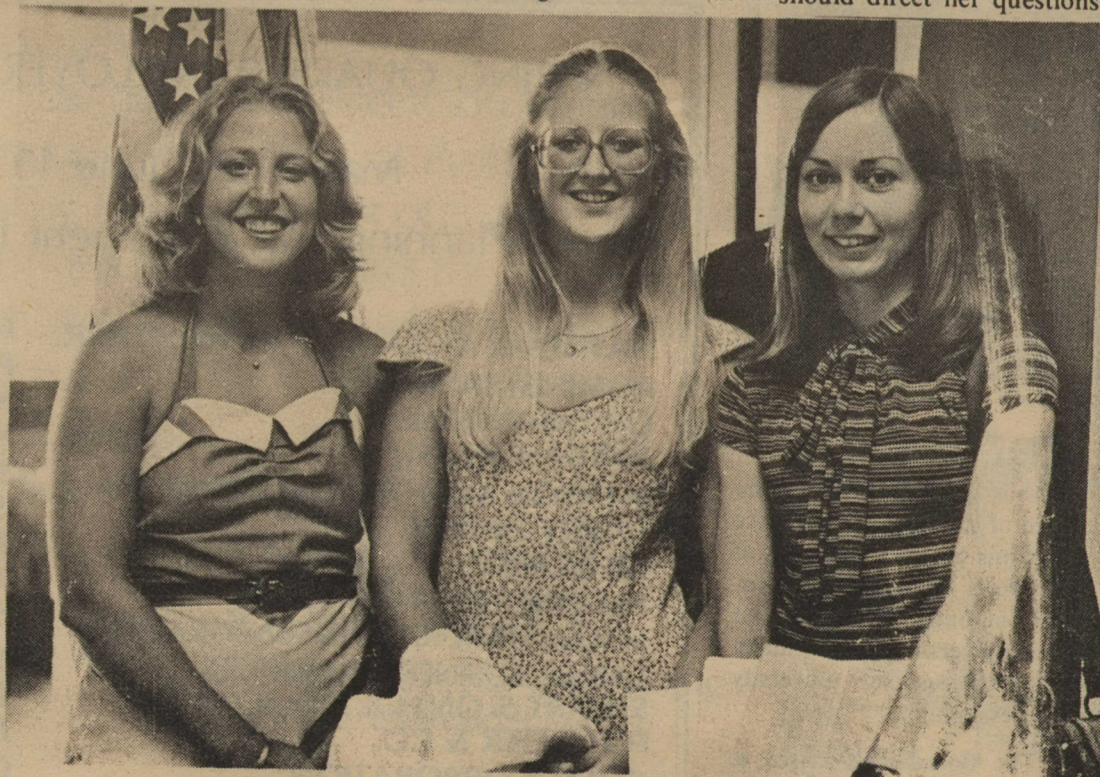

(6) Seek to know and understand one's teammates.

(7) Refrain from partaking of alcoholic beverages while representing one's school.

The facts are simple. Rose Brown, Linda Kavanagh and Jill Dubman violated every one of these ethical considerations repeatedly during the season and climaxing in the March 12-13 trip to Tampa's Hillsborough Community College. The trip that exploded in the struggling face of Sunblazer sports.

The "lower three players" -- Becky Hall, Nancy Blair and Pam Barbato -- sat on another couch, some fifteen feet away (but really, much, much further) speaking quietly about the lost season and their worn-out coach. They talked about being laughed at by the "top" players. The "top" players were too good for them and would not even practice with them. Becky Hall remembers being told that she "couldn't hit the ball hard enough" to practice with Brown, Kavanagh or Dubman.

Becky Hall lost eight of her ten singles matches this season. Tuesday afternoon she talked about cheating on her tennis tournament. They had filed the grievance because, in Rose Brown's words, "FIU and Karren Newman and the lower three players -- I will always frown on. We feel we got totally abused from FIU, the coach and team. This incident will not be brushed off by me, or here not by their tennis skills and triumphs, but, by their beer-drinking, their foul language, their lack of respect or consideration for their coach, their teammates, their athletic department or FIU.

Don Brusha sits in a comfortably messy office. He is able to dress casually and put his feet on his desk without fear. He is the Assistant Dean of Student Services at FIU. By American standards he has made it.

So why is Don Brusha quitting?

He talks of not liking "management direction." He compares office politics to a "series of feudal fiefdoms." He speaks of the "careful, cautious approach to problems." He wants to leave "while my reputation is reasonably intact."

Lighting a filtered Winston with a gold-plated lighter he speaks about cynicism. "Nobody likes an unchecked cynic. I can leave now or become the resident bastard."

Don Brusha is loathe to name names or discuss specific management decisions. "What would be the point?"

He is willing to discuss "student power" at length. "There is such a thing. School administrations are good at selling a bill of goods. The product is fear. Unfortunately, students are good at buying it. That creates a vacuum. Where there's a vacuum, the administration steps in to fill it.

"Students should push for a more active alumni association. Unlike the U of M, for instance, most FIU graduates stay and work in the community. Getting a degree is important, but now where you got the degree is a factor. Alumni can help FIU realize its true potential by pushing to correct its failures.

"Students are eligible to attend all meetings. They don't use their rights effectively. More can be accomplished by students at management meetings who are unafraid to ask questions than by a group of people with advanced degrees who take everything for granted and have forgotten why.

"School newspapers can be effective if they are willing to investigate a system instead of re-writing handouts. There is a lack of information. The majority of students go about their business and their only information comes from the school paper. Yet, when there are policy-making meetings at the management level reporters are elsewhere."

Don Brusha goes on to talk about a "coordination of effort," and about petitions distributed by an informed student body with effective leadership." Then he sighs and laughs. He had been talking with fervor.

So where does he go from here?

Don Brusha will be a full-time student at FIU working on his second degree in Philosophy. He is built somewhat along the line of a blond Al Hirt. If there is a power vacuum among students he should go a long way towards filling it.

Clean Gene makes return visit to FIU

ALAN SKOLNICK

Former U.S. Senator and 3rd party presidential candidate Eugene McCarthy will speak on the FIU campus, Monday, April 4th, 12:30 p.m., Athenium 100 across from the library.

McCarthy first came to national attention when he challenged incumbent Democratic president Lyndon Johnson in the 1968 New Hampshire primary as a protest against the Viet Nam war. Even though he lost that primary his strong showing was interpreted by the media as a triumph and McCarthy instantly became a viable candidate.

A huge outpouring of youthful volunteers rallied to the McCarthy banner, prompting the entry of the late senator Robert Kennedy into the race and the eventual withdrawal of President Johnson as a candidate to succeed himself. The assassination of Kennedy and the failure of his followers to join the McCarthy Kiddy Korps fragmented the peace movement and led to the nomination of Hubert Humphry at the violent Democratic Convention of 1968.

McCarthy entered the 1972 Democratic primaries but the war issue no longer aroused the powerful emotions that had been spent in 1968 and he did poorly. George McGovern, who also ran as a peace candidate, was swamped in the Nixon landslide.

In 1976, Gene McCarthy ran for president as an independent but media coverage of his campaign was restricted. He found it difficult to win a place on the ballot in many states. His attempts to enter the Ford-Carter debates were unsuccessful. Though his comments and innovative suggestions during the campaign were perceived by many as the most thoughtful of any of the candidates and his dry wit was celebrated, without national exposure McCarthy's campaign failed.

The former senator has won a reputation as a poet and writer and recently published a collection of stories that he told his children. He will speak about the difficulties of 3rd party candidates and the lack of choice inherent in a system that restricts the possibilities of all but the two major party candidates. A question and answer period will follow his talk and all are welcome to attend free of charge.

Lower summer fees

RUSTY SEVIGNY

Staff Writer

The State University System is encouraging students to attend classes during the summer quarter by offering a lower fee schedule for that term and by setting up new graduation requirements to include mandatory summer attendance for at least one summer.

Tuition for summer quarter will be reduced by six dollars per credit, producing a reduction from $16.50 to $10.50 per credit. This means a six-credit course will cost undergraduate students $52.50 instead of $82.50.

The "summer incentive" plan has been approved by the Board of Regents and will take effect this summer. It is part of the efforts by the SUS to increase summer enrollments at state universities and make year-round use of university facilities greater.

The Board also passed a requirement that all students entering a state university after Sept. 1, 1976 with less than 90 hours must take at least 15 hours during a summer term in order to graduate.

According to a statement from the Board of Regents, summer enrollment has increased steadily over the past few years.

Editorial Opinions

To the editor:

The Florida International University chapter of the United Faculty of Florida would like to express our support for the Dade County ordinance banning discrimination against homosexuals. We feel that all citizens of Dade County should have equal access to housing, jobs and freedom from police harassment. In particular, we are concerned that teachers are being singled out for inquiry into their sexual preferences.

The university community has experienced discrimination against homosexual faculty when the Johns Committee of the state legislature investigated the universities for radicals and homosexuals some 20 years ago. This kind of witch hunt is dangerous for academic freedom and destructive of the necessary atmosphere of tolerance which education requires. We are ready to stand with our colleagues in education in the public, parochial and private schools to prevent any repetition of such attacks on the rights of homosexual teachers.

We urge all teachers to become active in the fight to uphold the anti-discrimination ordinance. Dade County must be made into a community where mutual respect exists across lines of race, creed and sexual preference.

Sincerely,
Toby Berk

To the Editor:

First of all, a special thanks goes to the President of the University, Dr. Harold Crosby, the SGA (sponsors and supporters), the University Services, the Commercial and Diplomatic Communities and all those who made possible the first "International Diplomatic Gathering."

The event can be judged a success. Between 350 to 400 persons were present to welcome the new Dean of International Affairs, Dr. William Leffland.

Now that it is in the past, we can analyze the procedures followed and establish guidelines for next year's International Diplomatic Gathering. The money allocated for the affair was more than sufficient. Therefore, close to $300 has been returned to the SGA.

In keeping with diplomatic protocol invitations were extended to the local consular corps, administration, faculty, SGA, and as is the required practice the event was open to all FIU students.

The International Diplomatic Gathering accomplished the following:

1) Set the stage for new channels of communication within a university atmosphere.

2) A concerted student effort was successful in putting together a worthwhile event.

3) Offered a gainful experience to those who worked the hardest within the established diplomatic protocol procedure.

Again, I want to thank all those who made the International Diplomatic Gathering a success.

Sincerely,
James C. Dodge

At all public hearings held to consider increases in utility cost, no young people or students attend. The increases affect all of us -- young people and old.

Students should attend the public hearing Tuesday, April 5, at 9:30 a.m., at the Dupont Plaza Hotel, Miami, to request the Public Service Commission not to grant increases to Southern Bell. The more consumers who attend, the better are our chances not to get an increase.

Women's tennis season reinstated

JOHN EWALD
Sports Editor

The FIU Women's Tennis Team will play their final match of the season against the University of Miami on April 4. Coach Karren Newman will decide if any of the team's six players will represent FIU at the state championships. These decisions were reached Tuesday afternoon by the Athletic Appeal Board at a special meeting to hear the grievance filed by team members Rose Brown and Linda Kavanagh. The Board found considerable inconsistencies in the Athletic Department procedures of due process.

While the season has been reinstated, it is doubtful that any member of the team will be sent to the state championships which start this week. The team (2-7) on the season, has been the center of controversy for the last three weeks, when Brown and Kavanagh contacted several of the local television stations and informed them of their complaints against the team, the coach, FIU Athletic Director Tom Wonderling, FIU Women's Sports Coordinator Linda Miscovic. In apparent violation of the Code of Ethics of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (IAIW), guidelines which state that "When dealing with the news media, the student-athlete has an important obligation, to both teammates and the sport, not to make comments critical in nature that may be detrimental to the school's Department of Athletics." FIU is an active member of the AIAW.

The trouble started on the team's roadtrip to Tampa's Hillsborough Community College March 12-13. Brown, Kavanagh and Jill Dubman, the team's three top-ranked players, were disciplined by Coach Newman for drinking beer in the van rented for the trip, using foul language, and showing outright disrespect for their teammates and coach. Coach Newman, Wonderling, Miscovic and the team's other members decided to cancel the remaining match left on the schedule.

Wonderling termed the controversy "the worst incident that has happened since the Athletic Department started five years ago." Brown and Kavanagh recently became members of the Student Government Association and have questioned the disbursement of athletic funding of women's athletics in accordance with Title IX.

The Sunblazers baseball team shook off its early-season lethargy and had won 15 of its last 17 games entering Tuesday's contest.

During one stretch the Sunblazers won 12 straight, one victory short of the school record. They swept unbeaten through the first of their Twin Classic tournaments and lost only one game in Classic II to champion Seton Hall.

Lloyd Ard leads FIU in hitting with eight home runs, 31 RBI and a .355 average. Ard plays third base, but he also has a 3-0 pitching record and has yet to allow and earned run in 17 innings.

After 27 games the team was batting .293, and the pitching staff had a collective 2.99 earned run average.

The Sunblazers begin a three-day series today in Tampa. They face Tampa University today, then they meet South Florida tomorrow night and Saturday. They face Jacksonville on Monday back at the Tamiami Campus.

About one thousand paying spectators turned out Sunday to watch the Sunblazers soccer team battle on even terms for a while with the Fort Lauderdale Strikers of the North American Soccer League.

Then reality intruded and the Strikers forged a 5-0 victory. Among the Strikers was Curtis Leeper, the former FIU all-South forward, who played an outstanding game against his old mates.

The friendly soccer game produced more the $1,000 for the FIU athletic scholarship fund. The Strikers donated their share of the gate.

"It was a great experience for our players to go against a major league team like the Strikers," FIU Coach Bill Nuttall said. "And we really appreciate their contribution to our program."

The Strikers open their North American Soccer League season on April 3 at Lockhart Stadium in Fort Lauderdale.

Nuttall said that Strikers Coach Ron Newman has asked the FIU coach to assemble a college all-star team to face the NASL team in a final dress rehearsal game at Lockhart Stadium next week.

The FIU men's golf team not only won the University of Miami's Invitational golf tournament last week - the FIU second team also finished ahead of Miami. The UM bounced back, however, to beat FIU in a second invitational.

★★★★★★★★★★

Milt Eichner and Jim Doerr have been winning at the one and two singles positions, but a lack of experience has cost FIU heavily in dual tennis matches to date. Doerr has a 12-4 individual record.

★★★★★★★★★★

The women's softball team has an 8-4 record that includes three victories over the University of Florida Gators. FIU dropped two one-run decisions last week in the Gator Invitational. The leading hitter has been Eulalia Albalade.

Sunblazer Steve Weiss, FIU slugger, wallops a home run against Florida Southern.

Recreational sports coordinator Bill Nuttall reports that all four sections of beginning tennis classes have been filled. "That's 96 players signed up, and we still have 25 names on a waiting list," said Nuttall.

Want to learn to play golf? FIU Coach Bobby Shave will begin a golf instructional series starting April 25. The cost is $45 for 10 two-hour lessons on Saturday mornings or Monday or Thursday nights.

'The Other Three' have their day

Weight Watchers diet and a weekend in Naples to visit her parents and about why Sylvester Stallone should have won the Best Actor Award the night before. She is a warm, sensitive person with a vivacious laugh and a compassion for her tennis team, the entire team, not just the "top" or "lower" players. She is sad and concerned for her coach. She, too, wonders, what went wrong. "What upsets me the most about the season is that it was supposed to be fun. Tennis is a way to better yourself and your team. Sometimes Rose would look at us and say 'you call yourself tennis players?'" She continued. "I think the worst part of all this is the distrust and the hatred that resulted. You know, I haven't even wanted to play tennis since all this happened. My mom asked me the other day why didn't I go to the court and play. But this whole thing has left a bad impression on tennis for me."

Nancy Blair, a straight-A student athlete, also lost eight out of her ten singles matches this season. Like Becky Hall, she is a warm, sensitive person who is baffled and hurt by the events of what should have been a fun season. "We were always considered a handicap by the top three girls. They thought nothing for us. I realize that when I step on to the court that I represent FIU and it's an honor and a privilege. If you can't represent FIU as a student, an athlete and as a lady, then you shouldn't be out there at all. I think Karren did the best she could have done as a coach. You ask yourself -- 'hey, the whole season might have been better if she (Karren) had been real mean about everything, real strict, not a friend. But would it have been better that way?' -- I don't want Rose Brown, Jill Dubman or Linda Kavanagh representing me on the tennis court."

The third member of the "lower three" is Pam Barbato. She won only one singles match out of ten and that was by a forfeit. But in a very special way, Pam Barbato is one reason why the 1977 Women's Tennis Team should not be looked down upon or forgotten. She had the courage and the strength to stand up for her team, her coach and her school when the media people were out here trying to dig up what Tom Wonderling refers to as "smut" about FIU. She had a losing record but she is far from a "loser." She is an athlete who has followed the AIAW Code of Ethics all season long, respected her coach and teammates, tried to improve her game and brought more beauty to a tennis court than Chris Evert, the all-time "winner."

This young woman has a brilliant mind, a great sense of humor, a movie star's looks, and a lousy backhand.

And that is the biggest tragedy of all here. Pam Barbato may not have been able to offer this year's women's tennis team the highest level of tennis but she gave so much more than a smashing serve. She gave her compassion. Her dedication. Her self. The joy of team sports is far more than how many games you win. It's people coming together. Working hard together. Playing together. Winning together.

Losing together. Sharing together.

That Rose Brown, Linda Kavanagh and Jill Dubman were not able to see the beauty of Pam Barbato, Becky Hall and Nancy Blair is what is really the saddest thing of all about the the 1977 FIU Women's Tennis Season. That three good tennis players could not, would not take the time to get to know and help to improve the games of three weak tennis players is the tragedy here. Their coach, Karren Newman, has been hurt by their lack of respect and concern. Their teammates have been hurt. The athletic department has been hurt. FIU has been hurt.

But the worst pain of all will linger long after this season of distrust and hatred. As Becky Hall said, Tuesday afternoon in the hallway of the Primera Casa Building, far away from the white lines of the tennis courts. "Every time I even see a tennis court now it brings this all back. I never again want to experience a season like this one. It hurts too much. It still hurts."

Should class lectures be taped?

RICHARD DUEMMLING
Commentary

The year is 1984. The place is a classroom in any university across the nation. A class moderator pushes a button and a carefully edited and censored tape is played, giving the students a 60-minute lecture.

Gone are the jokes, moral issues, off the record remarks, candor, freedom of expression, and most important, gone is "the meeting of the minds."

Classes are boring and dull. Many students do not even attend class but pay an enterprising student for copies of the lecture he himself has taped.

This hypothetical example may very well be a reality in years to come. Why? Fear!

Instructors may be forced to use such methods to protect themselves against conflicts legal hearings and even plagiarism.

Students taping classes is the problem. Many students tape classes without permission of the instructor. Everything said in the lecture is then on record to be used at any time.

Most students tape lectures to enhance their memory span. Once a lecture is taped the student may listen to the lecture at his convenience. He can pick up what has been lost by memory and notes alone.

What do we specifically intend by taping lectures and what are the unforeseen, widespread consequences of taping in years to come.

Anthony Maingot

Instructors may fear that an off the record comment or a joke can be used against them by an estranged student with a revenge motive.

Many instructors do make comments to spark off a debate or discussion. These comments, taken out of context could be harmful to a professor's career if used unfairly.

An instructor prepares his lecture much the same as a writer prepares his copy. It is his own material and he has his rights to it. It should not be reproduced in any way without the instructor's permission.

The student attends an open class and is presented this material. It is his right to collect it in any way he may choose.

There are two important rights in conflict; the right to privacy and the right of openness.

The instructor has his right to privacy and to protect his own material.

The student has the right to do as he may wish with the presentation. He may take notes, just listen, or record the lecture.

The Florida State Attorneys office said that there is no law prohibiting the taping of classes but a person who plans to use the tapes for commercial use will get in trouble.

FIU has no policy regarding the taping of lectures. At the University of Miami it is left to the discretion of the instructor and if information is taped it is to be used only by the student.

Anthony Maingot, professor of sociology at FIU, believes this to be a sensitive and important issue. "What do we specifically intend by taping lectures and what are the unforeseen, widespread consequences of taping in years to come?"

Jann Fralicker, an FIU student, said "The taping of a course at any university should not be denied. Just as reading a book more than once can answer more questions, it is likewise with listening to a lecture more than once."

Some instructors may let physically handicapped people tape lectures but according to Fralicker "We are all handicapped when the retrieval of a lecture is not 100%

"The student who wishes to participate in the use of recording lectures has the right to do so. He may deem it an infringement of that right if denial is set upon him." said FIU student Dan Conner. "Yet, the professor who does not wish to be taped has the same right of denying a student to tape."

Some students feel that it is completely up to the instructor. "If a compromise can't be established then the decision should be left to the instructor," said Jorge Bofill.

"The instructor and the members of the class are acting as individuals," according to Mary Comerford, "therefore taping should not be permitted without explicit permission."

There have been examples in South American universities where students would hire transcribers to attend classes and record the lectures. The students would not attend classes except for testing.

A similar situation could occur here and all teacher-student relations would be gone. No more meeting of the minds.

According to Prof. Maingot it can happen in the future. "I think as a sociologist, with possibilities as well as actualities. We are now in a calm atmosphere. It is the future that is at stake. We must think of the consequences of taping today with its possibilities in the future."

1984 is only seven years away.

Medical technologists discuss unusual S. Florida infections

The American Society of Medical Technologists, in cooperation with Florida International University, will present a conference on April 9 in University House 140 from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. The conference will deal with issues of current interest in medical technology.

David Taplin, M.S., will lecture on infections occurring in South Florida and medical aspects of the Everglades L-1011 crash.

Astrid Mack, Ph.D., of the University of Miami Sickle Cell Center will speak on aspects of sickle cell anemia.

The cost to FIU students is $1.50, others $3. Lunch will be served.

CO-OPERATIVE Education

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS...

• What is cooperative education?

Cooperative education is a program by which a student alternates quarters of full-time paid employment for which academic credit is earned with quarters of full-time study?

• What is the purpose of cooperative education?

It is a program which offers an opportunity to obtain practical experience in a chosen program of study.

• How does a student qualify for co-op?

- By having attended FIU as a full-time degree-seeking student for at least one quarter.
- By having at least two full academic quarters left before graduation.
- By being approved for participation in the program by a departmental faculty advisor.

• What are the long-range benefits of being a co-op student?

- The specialized experience that you gain as a co-op student greatly improves your chances for securing permanent employment upon graduation.

- Although there are no commitments on the part of the employer or the student, it is a fact, however, that 80% of all co-op students have gone on to full-time employment with their company.
- Offers chance to explore career objectives.

The Cooperative Education Program is currently open to all majors in the following academic areas:

College of Arts and Sciences

Group to share alternative living, Rock 'n Roll music

RUSTY SEVIGNY

Stephen Gaskin and the Tennessee Farm Band will play good ol' rock and roll at FIU on Saturday, April 2, at 8 p.m. in the UH Forum.

The Band, its music guaranteed to "make you feel good," is a part of a spiritual community in Tennessee called the Farm. It has a sister branch in Homestead.

The Farm headquarters is on 1,750 acres in Southern Tennessee, with 1,200 men, women, and children attempting and apparently succeeding in creating a lifestyle of spiritual and material alternatives.

The Farm in Tennessee is in its sixth year. The Homestead group of 100 persons raises vegetables for local market, and also supplies the Tennessee farm with its winter vegetables. Their vegetable stand is located at Krome Ave. and SW 184 St.

The spiritual teacher of the Farm is Stephen, a minister and the author of Monday Night Class, Caravan, and This Season's People. Stephen says, "We're trying to settle on a standard of living that would be fair if everybody in the world lived that way—not grim, but graceful and fun and full of love and friendship and being happy living together—a level that everybody in the world could make it on with existing resources."

Plenty, the Farm's charitable corporation, is attempting to share those "existing resources" with the rest of the world. In its first two years, Plenty distributed 50 tons of food in the West Indies, Latin America, and disaster-stricken cities in the U.S. Plenty teams were sent to Guatemala to help re-construct schools and houses damaged by the 1976 earthquake.

What is the ideology that holds 1,300 persons together? Robert Tepper, a resident of the community said, "Knowing and understanding that we're all one - this holds us together. We are spiritually in agreement to work things out."

In his book, This Season's People, Stephen writes: "You can become interdependent with a lot of other people and become independent by banding together and pooling your labor so that you can get strong enough to do something. You can learn how to take care of yourself and get strong enough to take care of somebody besides yourself."

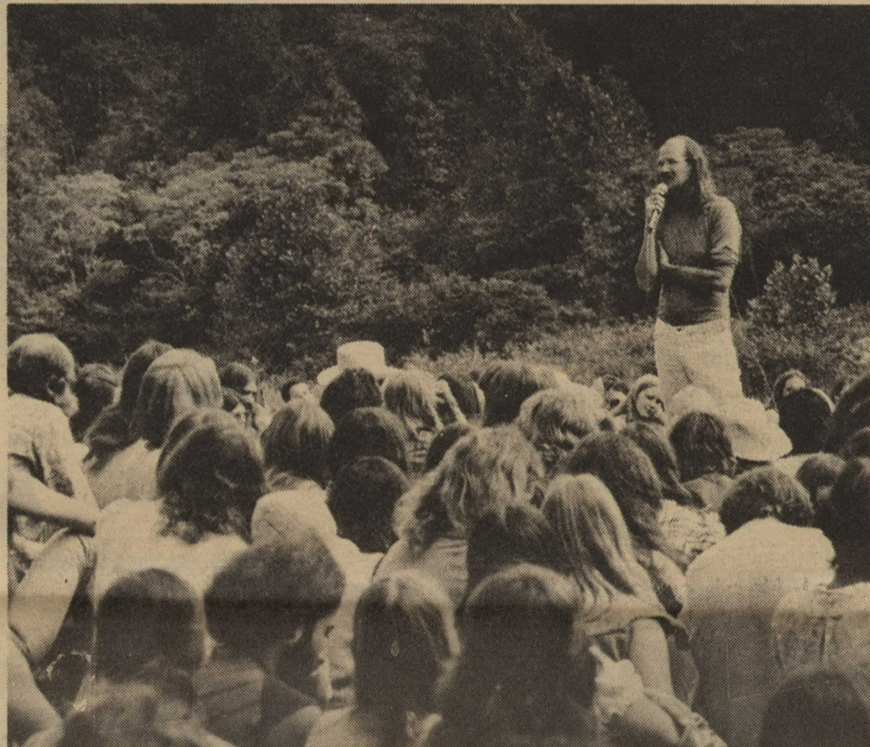

The Farm is demonstrating this independence and interdependence. It has its own school, bank, motor pool, construction company, woodshop, printshop, trucking company, telephone system, medical clinic, and ambulance service - all are incorporated as a non-profit, religious foundation.

According to the Farm's brochure: "We're complete vegetarians, growing most of the food we eat. We're also delivering our own babies at home. We hold all property in common and share what we have according to need. We're out front trying to build an alternative culture."

When it comes to nutrition, milk leaves soft drinks far behind.

Take a look at that chart! If you're gulping down soft drinks and junk food all day instead of eating balanced meals, you're coming up with a lot of zeros! Nutrition is a key to good looks, good grades and good performance in sports, and milk is loaded with high-powered nutrition. Drink cold, fresh milk with your meals, and come out ahead.

Can you be good at something you don't believe in?

Yes.

You can be good at passing tests that are meaningless to you.
You can be good at selling encyclopedias that you know are inferior.

Ultimately, you can even be good at a profession that you don't really believe in.

You can be good. But for some people, being good just isn't good enough.

For the people who brew Busch beer, it isn't good enough. That's why, at Anheuser-Busch, we persist in brewing Busch beer just one way—the natural way.

We frankly believe that's the best way to brew beer.
And when you believe in what you're doing,
you just naturally do it better.

Try a Busch.

We believe you'll agree.

Party rocked and rolled "Elan"

BILL ASHTON
Managing Editor

The first nighttime Elan party was, without a doubt, the social event of the year. Not since Jimmy Carter's inaugural has the country seen such revelry.

The crowd began to gather outside of the UH building around 8 p.m., looking forward to the advertised free food, old movies, and most of all, the wet shorts contest.

A band of 15-year-old kids played their hearts out from about eight until their bedtime. Their name, "Dusk," was probably chosen because the group had to remember when to start packing their instruments and heading home. Really, they were pretty good.

The next band, "Clear Daze" was even better. They performed a few Led Zeppelin tunes, a few top forty classics, and a couple of original compositions. Their manager, a weird chap with very long hair, did an excellent speed-freak imitation. But was it part of the act?

As the audience munched their knockwurst, Master of Ceremonies Lenny Lang came on stage to do his classic Henny Youngman-Rodney Dangerfield routine. Lang's comedy is strangely unique, making many laugh and many others wish he would stick to photography.

Then came the big event. The contest. Lang made a few more jokes, tried in vain to get more contestants, and the wet shorts contest was on.

The FIU baseball team's star pitcher, Jerry Ferrucci, was the first at bat. Shouts of "Rocky, Rocky" greeted the sinewy Sunblazer as he did his Sylvester Stallone imitation. The audience of over 350 went wild as the now-frantic Ferrucci (the "Italian Stallion") doffed his robe, revealing a splendid physique, clad in a flimsy pair of swim trunks. He looked like a sure winner.

Next came fellow Sunblazer Drew Siemon. A pair of white Bermuda shorts covered him as he stepped on stage. He did a slow strip with the shorts, ending up in a small white outfit. Lang made a few comments, which shall remain unprinted. The crowd was semi-enthusiastic at this point, wondering if that was all there was.

Out of the shadows of the campus came the dark horse. A man by the name of Al Baldessano. Though a few pounds overweight, Baldessano had his heart in his work that night. His oversized bermudas, again white, began to slip, revealing a bit of his backside. Perhaps it was intentional, perhaps not, but the moment influenced the audience, which was also the jury.

"Big Al" went on to hose himself and the other contestants with a style not often seen in amateur athletic events. He won the majority of the applause, and thus the contest. The Italian Stallion was gracious in defeat, congratulating the winner and pledging a comeback. "Big Al," in reply to one of Lang's questions, said that he would not join the baseball team, comparing their play to "watching paint dry." The Sunblazers, perhaps spurred by the insult, have been playing their best ever since, at one point winning 12 games in a row.
