School of Health Sciences at FIU names its first dean

Dr. William J. Keppler, vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Alaska in Anchorage, has been named as the first dean of the School of Health Sciences at Florida International University.

FIU President Mitch Maidique announced that Keppler will assume his new post in April. Associate Professor Reba Anderson has been serving as acting dean of the school, which was created in 1985.

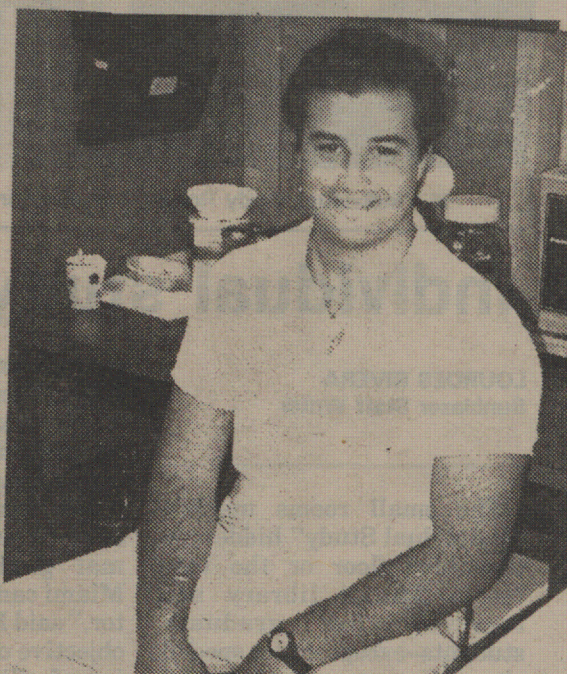

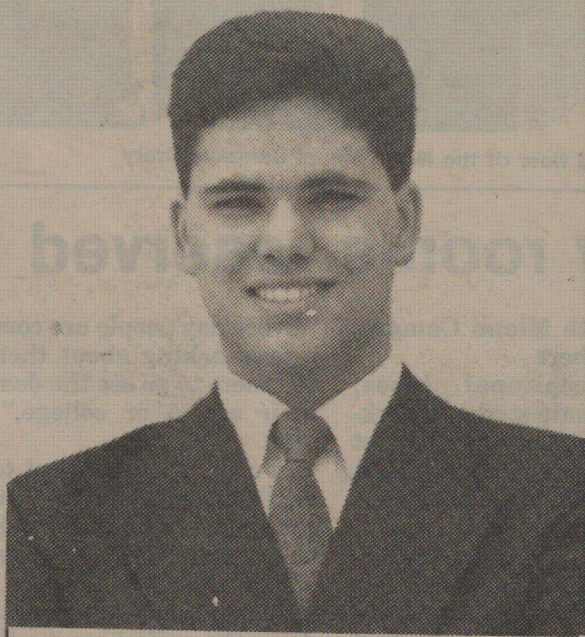

"Dr. Keppler has a distinguished record as both a senior academic administrator and a professor in the health-related disciplines," said Maidique. "The University is very fortunate that he is joining us as dean of the School of Health Sciences. I'm confident that his leadership will provide the impetus for the school to further accelerate the tremendous progress it has made during its early years."

Keppler, who has nearly 25 years of university teaching and administration experience, began his career at Eastern Illinois University as a professor of genetics and assistant to the provost.

From 1976 to 1985, he was dean of arts and sciences at Boise State University in Idaho, a position he also filled when he subsequently joined the University of Alaska in 1985.

"It is a privilege for me to be selected as the new dean of the School of Health Sciences," said Keppler. "The school responds to and is a resource for the citizens of Greater Miami and the entire state of Florida. I welcome the opportunity to promote academic excellence and develop new graduate programs. In addition, I plan to encourage external funding for research,

Vice Presidential hopefuls want to make a difference

The Spring '88 Student Government Association elections will take place at Florida International University today and tomorrow. Vice presidential candidates Harvey Hyman and Manny Lamazares have been campaigning since March 14th. Each hopes to be the students' choice to fill SGA's second-highest elected office.

Hyman and Lamazares are after the position presently occupied by Natalie Butto. Both candidates have been putting up posters and flyers to let students know about their qualifications and their goals. Butto mentioned she doesn't miss all the hard work involved in campaigning. Hyman and Lamazares are just starting to taste the responsibilities involved in seeking the vice presidency.

Hyman is a junior and a finance major at FIU. He has been involved in SGA for one year. Lamazares is a sophomore majoring in public administration. He was elected SGA senator in the Fall of 1986. Both candidates are 20 years old.

When asked why they were running for vice president, both candidates said they believe they can do the job.

"I think I can make the difference," said Lamazares.

The "difference" he is referring to is getting more students involved in SGA.

Hyman, who lives between the University Park and North Miami Campuses, said he would be the right link of communication for both schools.

"I feel I'm the most qualified to do the job," he said.

The SGA vice president serves as a lobbyist for student needs. Whenever the president cannot come to the students, the vice president is the one who can notify him of changes students want to see at FIU. The vice president also serves as leader and director of the Senate.

Hyman said he would "express the students' views to the president, the senate, and the administration" in order to improve communication.

Sigma Phi Epsilon brother Lamazares said he wants to see the apathy around FIU disappear.

"I want to be part of those changes which we need," he added.

Lamazares is presently the chairperson of the Athletic and Recreation Committee, Board of Governors vice-chair, and a member of the Finance and Appropriations committee. Hyman is a Senate consular, member of the Board of Governors at North Miami, chairperson of the Ways and Means sub-committee for the Board of Governors, member of the Social and Cultural and Rules and Agenda committees, and vice president of the Student Advisory committee.

Individual study rooms reserved for graduate students

LOURDES RIVERA
Sunblazer Staff Writer

The small rooms marked "Individual Study" hidden on the third floor of the new North Miami library are reserved for graduate students—except under special circumstances, university officials say.

The rooms—known as carrels—are reserved for students working on their doctoral dissertations or master's thesis, said Lina Monnell, administrative assistant to the vice president of the North Miami Campus, Adam Herbert.

"In exceptional cases, undergraduate students working on a major research project will be assigned a carrel. That student must be under the formal guidance of a North Miami campus program director," said Monnell. "The whole objective of having the carrels is to facilitate the research of those students pursuing graduate degrees."

Reference Librarian Scott Cass said many undergraduate, as well as graduate, students have inquired about the carrels.

"Every day people are coming in and asking about them. I tell them to go see the dean of their school or college," he said.

In order for a student to be eligible for assignment to a carrel, he/she must be working on a "major research project," according to Monnell. The professor for whom the student is doing the project must write a letter to the dean or associate dean of the school or college to request a carrel for the student. The dean's office then submits a formal application to Vice President Herbert for approval.

The fifteen carrels are assigned on a first-come, first-served basis for one semester at a time. A student assigned a carrel is eligible to renew the assignment for the following semester as long as he/she is still working on the project.

Fourteen of the carrels are currently assigned to mostly graduate students. Only one undergraduate assignment has been made to a disabled student. Monnell added that even if there are unassigned carrels, they will not be assigned to a student who does not have a research project.

When an assignment is made, the student is given a key to the room and can use it whenever he/she wants to. The rooms are usually assigned to one person at a time, but that may not always be the case.

"If we have more requests than we have rooms, the students will have to double up. But so far, that has not happened," Monnell explained. She said that the possibility of sharing a carrel is expressed to each student at the time the assignment is made.

Antonie Downs, associate director of libraries at the North Miami Campus, said that the library has no involvement in the assigning of carrels. She added that the only time library personnel goes into the carrels is to make sure that all the books in there are checked out and to make sure that no reference books are left inside.

Downs added that the larger group study rooms are available to anyone who wishes to use them. Priority is determined by the size of the group.

SGA holds budget hearings

REY QUINTANA
Sunblazer Editor

The Student government Association at Florida International University held its annual budget hearings on March 21st and 22nd. Committees and organizations which are funded by the Activity and Service (A&S) Fee charged to students at registration time were given the opportunity to present their requests for funding to the SGA Executive Finance Committee.

According to SGA Comptroller Ralph Patino, the A&S fee is currently set at $2.55 per credit hour, and an increase to $2.80 per credit hour is planned for the next school year. The fee generates approximately $1,200,000 in income, which is then distributed to the various SGA committees, the art museum, the department of theatre & dance, and the office of student activities, among others. "We hold these hearings to make sure that each organization can justify the increases they request," said Patino. "We don't mind spending the money. We just want to know where it's going."

Robert La Torre, chairman of SGA's Inter-Organization Committee, requested a $2,000 increase over last year's allocation of $16,000 for the IOC. "Our committee is responsible for funding the student organizations," he explained. "We need this increase so that the various clubs at FIU can become more active next year."

The Executive Finance Committee will meet to draft next year's budget sometime in April. The recommendations of the committee will be reviewed by the new SGA administration the following month, and any changes and revisions will be made at that time. "The new board may decide to totally change the budget," said Patino. "It depends on what they consider the priority programs."

Remember to register early for your summer courses. The summer school schedule is limited, and not all classes will be available this term.

Last day to pay for classes is April 15, 1988. After you file your tax return, remember to pay for your classes!

FIU professor wins history award

Mark D. Szuchman, Florida International University professor of Latin American history, has been awarded the "Conference on Latin American History Prize" for 1987. Szuchman merited the award for his article "Household Structure and Political Crisis: Buenos Aires, 1810-1860," published in the "Latin American Research Review."

The award is given yearly for the best article in English on Latin American history in a journal other than the "Hispanic American Historical Review."

"This national distinction given to one of our faculty members is an additional recognition of our university's level of excellence," said FIU President Mitch Maidique.

In the citation for the award, the Conference Prize Committee referred to Szuchman's article as "a pathbreaking, balanced and creative analysis of an important problem in the history of 19th-century Argentina."

The award carries a stipend of $200 and a certificate. It was presented to Szuchman at the award ceremony of the annual meeting of the Conference on Latin American History in Washington, D.C.

Szuchman's latest book, "The Quest for Order in Buenos Aires: Essays on Family and Community, 1810-1860," will soon be published by the Stanford University Press. The study is the result of eight years of research in the national and provincial archives of Argentina and Uruguay and in several U.S. libraries.

Blue directs university fund

Sandra A. Blue, a senior associate with the United Way of Dade County for four years, has been named Florida International University Director of Annual Giving Programs, according to the Office of Media Relations.

Blue will plan, coordinate and implement the annual fund for the University. The program will emphasize unrestricted private gifts from alumni, parents, corporations and friends of FIU.

"We are fortunate to have a person with Ms. Blue's experience and expertise to assist in our quest for excellence," said Walter Strong, Vice President for University Relations and Development. "Her background in fundraising campaigns will greatly enhance our efforts."

While at the United Way, Blue implemented campaign strategies targeted for small businesses, professionals, and residents as well as several leadership gifts through the county.

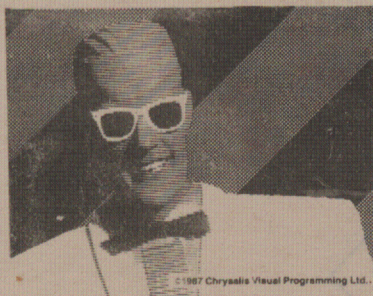

Prior to her time with the United Way, she held administrative positions with the Young Women's Christian Association and Joint Action in Community Service in Boston.

Blue earned a bachelor's degree in social work from FIU and a master's degree in education from Cambridge College. She is an alumnus of Leadership Miami, the Greater Miami Chamber of Commerce, the Council for Advancement and Support of Education and the South Florida Professional Network.

Psychology conference held in Miami

CINDY L. CHICVARA
FIU Dept. of Psychology

The American Psychology-Law Society (AP-LS), Division 41, mid-winter meeting was held in Miami Beach this year at the Eden Roc Hotel, and Florida International University was well represented at the proceedings.

The event took place March 10, 11 and 12 and is an annual conference for professionals involved with combining psychological and legal issues.

Topics of the panel discussions included attorneys' perceptions of psychologists in the courtroom, legal issues of psychological testing, expert testimony, legal policy, ethics, children as witnesses, violent and anti-social behavior, juror decisions, eyewitness research, issues on battered women, perspectives on juvenile capital punishment, psycholegal perspectives on corporate behavior, and hostage negotiations.

FIU professor Gary Moran was site coordinator at the event as well as chairperson for two presentations. The first was a symposium on attorneys' perceptions of behavioral science consultants. The second was a featured presentation with Miami's criminal justice dignitaries Janet Reno, Dade County prosecutor, and Bennet H. Brummer, public defender. FIU faculty and students from the psychology department participated in the three-day event.

Professor Brian Cutler and Professor Ronald Fisher presented research papers on the subject of eyewitness identification. As pointed out by Professor Moran prior to their presentations, all the members of the panel on eyewitness identification had attended Florida International University at one time or another.

Also attending the conference were local lawyers and legal dignitaries and the leading psychologists in the United States and Canada involved in the research of legal issues. These include FIU faculty members Dr. Gary Moran, Dr. Brian Cutler, Dr. Ronald Fisher, and Dr. Janet Parker.

Those in attendance enjoyed Miami's mild weather, diverse nightlife, and white sandy beaches.

The meeting should be considered an important step toward establishing the psychology department's new Applied Doctoral Program as a viable and valuable program. It will offer graduate students a curriculum in legal psychology and industrial/organizational psychology.

Applications to the program are currently being accepted for the Fall 1988 semester.

Candidates speak at open forum

REY QUINTANA
Sunblazer Editor

The contenders for the offices of president, vice president and comptroller in the upcoming Student Government Association elections got a chance to sell their services at a Candidate's Forum held on March 24th at University Park. Unfortunately, there wasn't much of a crowd to talk to.

The forum began at 11:30 am to an almost empty UH Pit. Each candidate was given 3 minutes on the podium, and students in the audience followed up with questions dealing with various issues.

Comptroller hopefuls Steve Capellan and Ralph Patino spoke first. Capellan outlined his qualifications and said he "gives the students what they want" while Patino emphasized his experience and on-the-job training. Patino's composure was challenged by a member of the crowd who accused him of tearing down flyers of presidential candidate George Twum-Barimah and replacing them with his own, but the incumbent comptroller denied the allegations and Elections Commissioner Alex Fernandez pointed out that no formal complaint had been filed against Patino.

The vice presidential candidates were next. Harvey Hyman pointed out the need for improved communication between the North Miami, Broward and University Park campuses, and Manny Lamazares stressed the need for change and spoke of getting more students involved in SGA. Hyman was questioned about uniting the different schools and colleges within a specific campus. He replied that if elected, he would visit the different departments of each school on a regular basis and he would bring any grievances from teachers and students to the SGA for consideration.

Tim Benjamin led the presidential lineup, speaking of his extensive service in SGA over the past two years. Zeida Comesanas, the only female running for office, drew heavy applause when she promised to donate the salary of the SGA president towards the establishment of a scholarship fund to help students pay for their education. And Frank Janisch passed out lemons representing the "sour deals" he feels students are being given at FIU. George Twum-Barimah was not present at the University Park Forum, but he appeared at the North Miami campus event on Monday, March 28.

SGA elections will be held on March 29th and 30th. The polls will be open from 10:00 am to 8:00 pm. Students can vote with a valid I.D. in front of the University Park Library or in the lobby of Academic I in the North Miami Campus.

Student awarded internship for environmental studies

Lisa Boegen, an environmental studies major who established a wildlife refuge in South Miami, has been awarded an Environmental Sciences internship at Florida International University.

The $1,500 internship covers two semesters and is paid for by funds annually donated to FIU by race promoter Ralph Sanchez. The fund was established in conjunction with the annual Miami/Indy race held at Tamiami Park.

Boegen, a junior with near-perfect grades, hopes to work on environmental problems after she graduates.

"I've always loved the outdoors," she said. "I'm lucky to find a career I enjoy."

Two years ago, Boegen and friends who share a love for animals set up the Animal Rehabilitation Center, a non-profit volunteer group who nurses injured animals and birds back to health. The center still operates, though Boegen has had to take a hiatus while completing her education.

David Lee, a biology professor and Boegen's supervisor, said the department is fortunate to have a student with her enthusiasm and academic ability.

"She is working on two important projects: our botanical island and the environmental preserve," Lee said. "She's a very important part of our team."

Board of Regents approves new degree programs at FIU

The Florida Board of Regents has approved the introduction of four new degree programs at Florida International University, as well as the planning of three other degree programs.

Three of the degree programs will be offered by the FIU School of Health Sciences: a Bachelor of Science in prosthetics and orthotics; a master's in occupational therapy; and a master's in medical laboratory sciences.

The Regents also authorized the implementation of a master's program in construction management in the College of Engineering. All four programs are currently accepting applicants.

In addition, the University will now move into the planning phase of three new graduate degree programs: a Master in Fine Arts in creative writing in the College of Arts and Sciences; a Master in Science in mechanical engineering in the College of Engineering; and a Master in Science in physical therapy in the School of Health Sciences.

The Regents also approved a feasibility study to introduce a Bachelor of Science program in computer engineering in the College of Engineering curriculum.

For additional information on any of these programs, contact the Office of Admissions at 554-2363.

VIP program is looking for interested high school students

High school students who have completed their junior and senior years with outstanding grades have an opportunity to get a close-up look at college before taking the final plunge.

The Florida International University Vested Interest Program (VIP) gives academically talented students in public or private schools a glimpse into what college is all about. Students accepted for the VIP program will take two college-level courses during the 1988 summer term on a full tuition scholarship. A book stipend is also provided.

All students will enroll in a three-credit college library research and report writing course. They also will select a course from six areas: human biology, computer programming, ecology of South Florida, health science, international perspectives or literature.

Credits earned may be applied toward a degree at FIU or transferred to another university.

Students interested in the VIP program must complete the FIU application form and compose a 400 to 500 word essay stating their reasons for wanting to participate.

Applications may be obtained from high school counselors or by calling Caryl Myers Grof, director of special programs at FIU, at 554-2892.

Females sought for participation in psychology experiment

Dr. Joan T. Erber, associate professor of psychology at Florida International University, is conducting a series of studies which will involve interviewing many adults of all age groups. For the first study, Dr. Erber is seeking English-speaking females in the age ranges of 19-32 and 65-78. Participants should have at least a high school education, but should not be full-time students at the present time.

Participation will consist of two individual interviews, conducted one to two weeks apart, in which participants will be asked to express their opinions and thoughts about various aspects of life.

The third and final phase of the study consists of a brief survey mailed to the participants. All information from the interviews and the survey will be completely confidential. A $25 stipend will be paid to all subjects completing the three phases of the study.

Dr. Erber's project is funded by a two-year research grant from the National Institute on Aging. The $140,000 grant is being used to implement the Adult Development Project (ADP) at FIU's University Park psychology laboratory.

The purpose of the ADP is to learn more about how adults continue to change throughout their lives. "We have con-

Keppler received his bachelor's degree in zoology and chemistry from the University of Miami. He received his master's degree in biological sciences and his Ph.D. in genetics from the University of Illinois.

He is still active in the field of genetics, having chaired the Idaho Genetics Advisory Committee. He also served on the education committee for the Pacific Northwest Regional Genetics Group. He has published many articles on genetics and presented workshops and seminars for health professionals in human genetics.

Faculty members named vice provosts

Provost Judith Stiehm has named three veteran faculty members and administrators to the position of vice provost at Florida International University. They are Dr. Judy Blucker, Dr. Thomas A. Breslin and Dr. Charles Elkins.

"These three distinguished faculty members exemplify the excellence from which we are able to choose in making administrative appointments," Stiehm said when making the announcements. "Because of their experience, wisdom, and the respect they are accorded by their fellow faculty, Chuck Elkins, Judy Blucker and Tom Breslin are proving invaluable in helping to develop long-range plans and in bringing maximum efficiency to the Division of Academic Affairs at FIU. I'm proud to be able to work with each of them."

Blucker, the University's chief administrator for the Broward campus programs, has been a faculty member or administrator since 1972.

Since she was appointed director of the Broward programs last year, enrollment has increased by more than 50 per cent among degree-seeking students. She will continue in her role as the University's Broward administrator.

Blucker was also the former associate dean of the College of Education at the North Miami Campus and she was acting vice president for student affairs for three years.

She earned her Ph.D. in physical education measurement and evaluation, with a minor in educational statistics, at Florida State University in 1972.

Breslin, who has directed the Division of Sponsored Research and Training since 1982, was previously associate vice president for academic affairs, appointed in 1987. Under his leadership, FIU research and training grants have increased more than 32 per cent, from $6.25 million to $8.27 million. He will continue in his role as head of research and training.

Breslin speaks Chinese and has taught Chinese, Japanese, American and diplomatic history, and international relations.

He earned his Ph.D. in U.S. diplomatic and East Asian history at the University of Virginia in 1972.

Elkins, former associate dean of arts and sciences at the North Miami Campus, will assume a new role as the provost's chief liaison with faculty members. Elkins, who has served on many academic task forces and committees since coming to FIU in 1972, is a professor in the English department and was director of the Humanities program at the North Miami campus.

He is currently revising student grievance procedures, studying statistical consulting at the University, working with the centers and institutes with the academic units, and handling several other projects dealing with faculty issues. Elkins, co-editor of "Science Fiction Studies," is also working on a book on literature and social change during the English and American revolutions. In addition, he is currently editing three other books.

He earned his Ph.D. in literature and literary criticism at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale.

Cuban-born guitar master joins faculty

Cuban-born guitar performer and professor Carlos Molina has joined the Florida International University faculty and will be teaching group and individual guitar lessons at University Park.

Since his arrival in the United States in 1983, Molina has been busy teaching graduate classes and lecturing in Arizona and New Jersey. He has also taught at Miami Dade Community College.

During the last five years, Molina has played extensively, including at the Dade County Auditorium, the Miami Beach Theater of the Performing Arts, the Kennedy Center and the Metropolitan Opera House. He has participated in many international music festivals. Last year, he was invited to the Arizona GFA/ASTA Guitar Festival.

Molina has performed in numerous countries. He has toured extensively in Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, the Soviet Union, Martinique, Spain and the United States. He is presently preparing for a tour through Spain and Greece.

Carlos Molina studied music at the Hubert de Blanck and Havana conservatories in his native Cuba and graduated in 1969. He specialized in the interpretation of contemporary music, with emphasis on music by Cuban composer Leo Brouwer, with whom he was closely associated. In 1970, Molina was awarded first prize in the National Guitar Competition in Cuba.

While working as a guitar teacher in Cuba, Molina wrote numerous articles, gave lectures and organized many radio and television programs. As a result of his efforts, Guitar History was included for the first time as a subject in the curriculum of the Superior School of Music. The magazine "Guitar Review" will include in its next issue an article by Molina on the history of the guitar in Cuba.

Molina's work in favor of the guitar has been recognized by several composers who have dedicated musical pieces to him. He has been included in Josef Powrozniak's "Guitar Lexicon" and in the "Guitar Dictionary" by Manuel Ruano Sanchez.

Additional information on guitar classes by Carlos Molina can be obtained from the FIU Department of Music at 554-2896.

Rey Quintana, Sunblazer Editor

If you've been at FIU for at least two semesters, you're probably just as sick of hearing about FPIRG as I am. Just when we thought this whole negative option mumbo-jumbo had been laid to rest, the Student Supreme Court decided that last semester's election was not kosher. As a result, the Optional Fee Assessment Referendum has again been placed on an election ballot.

Give it a rest, guys. The sad truth is that most FIU students couldn't care less about how FPIRG is funded.

How do I know? For starters, less than 10 per cent of the FIU student population showed up at the polls last semester. 1,300 votes may have been cast in the Fall '87 election, but 15,000 others were not. And yet FPIRG claims that students overwhelmingly support negative option. Yeah, right.

Those who are screaming for a positive checkoff system claim that students are being "ripped off" or "penalized" for their failure to initial a one-inch box during course registration. If students are in fact being ripped off, they apparently don't seem to mind. The opportunity to change the system was presented and largely ignored.

It will probably be ignored this time around as well.

Our "Speak out!" column in this week's issue asked for student opinions regarding FPIRG's funding. We were lucky to get the few replies that are printed. Most kids just gave us a blank look and said, "What the hell is FPIRG?"

Negative option may or may not be a problem, but the BIG problem is the attitude of the FIU student body. It is not as informed as it should be and cares not to be any more informed than it already is. This lack of interest is due mostly to ignorance, and that ignorance is the real issue that needs to be addressed. Campaign violations? Give me a break.

SGA needs to increase its efforts to educate students. Public meetings should be held in the library, where kids study, and in front of the cafeteria, where kids eat. When election time comes around, more voting areas need to be designated. A student who has a class in the Sunblazer Arena will not drive to the library just to mark a ballot. Trust me-it won't happen.

Finally, when this FPIRG matter is resolved, please bury it once and for all. Otherwise, the few who care enough to participate in an election may end up losing interest. And when other issues are brought

Letters to the Editor

SGA is not after FPIRG

To the Editor:

I would like to take the opportunity to clarify some of the misleading statements made by Albert Torres in his article "Supreme Court rules against FPIRG" (March 15, 1988).

First of all, the Student Government Association has never filed a grievance against the Florida Public Interest Research Group in the Student Supreme Court. What actually occurred was that a registered student organization (FIUSA) filed a grievance with the elections commission after last Fall's election. The elections commission ruled the election invalid and stated that the Positive/Negative Option Referendum should be placed back on the ballot for the Spring '88 elections. FPIRG appealed that decision to the Student Supreme Court, which agreed with the elections commission that the referendum should be placed back on the ballot.

Secondly, Mark Phagan's quote "the people have clearly shown their support of FPIRG" implies that the issue of the referendum was whether students support FPIRG and agree with their goals and priorities. This is simply not the case. The issue is whether FPIRG's funding procedures are fair.

Although the impact of this decision (converting to a positive option concerns tens of thousands of dollars in potential losses to FPIRG) is great, I would argue that only two factors could cause this to happen. One is that perhaps FPIRG does not have all the support they say they do. It is insisted by FPIRG that at least 50 per cent of the student population support them. If students really supported FPIRG, why would they not voluntarily fund them (positive option)? Why would their paid staff need to lobby so hard on campus if so many students supported them?

The second reason that I feel their income would decrease would be attributed to those students who inadvertently pay the FPIRG fee. The system presently used requires an action to decline the FPIRG fee (negative option). Students who overlook, misunderstand or forget this portion of the registration form pay the fee automatically.

Finally, regarding the bylaws of FPIRG, every corporation or association that has bylaws also has the power to change them. Just because "the negative option fee is in the bylaws" does not mean that the bylaws can not change. Why should they change when, under the negative option, FPIRG receives more funding? Possibly because the negative check-off system lends itself to being unfair (in the FPIRG's favor).

The point is that with the

to a vote in the future, make an effort to reach every single student that attends this university. Educating the masses will increase voter turnout and, hopefully, will put an end to the "I don't care" syndrome.

FIU pep band at women's games

To the Editor:

I am replying to the letter "FIU Pep Band ignores women's team" in your 3-18-88 issue in which Diana Oaten Lalani, President of the FIU chapter of NOW, presented an inaccurate picture of the Department of Music's commitment to FIU and SGA.

Ironically, she is guilty of what she accuses others of doing, not supporting the women's basketball team. Had she been at the last couple of games she would have "heard" that there was a band performing great music and creating much spirit.

I'm not sure to what problem she is referring when she states that several people "condone the situation." I alone am responsible for when and where the eleven performing ensembles of the Department of Music schedule their activities, and I assure you that no one confronted me about any problem. I do believe, though, that the correct channels were not followed in expressing a request for performances. Dr. Young does not book "entertainment" for us. I do, and I would have been happy to consider any requests for music.

The Department of Music has 70 majors and a whole host of wonderful non-majors who participate in our ensembles. These students commit themselves to many hours of extra-curricular time. The list of performing activities for the department is over 60. That is about 5 a week excluding rehearsal and preparation time. If there is a problem, it can be stated as an insensitivity on the part of some to the hard work and time put in by the faculty and students in our ensembles. There are only so many activities that can be managed in one school year. Our students have to study and work a part-time job, too.

Finally, we are "cooperating." SGA is getting much more from us for its money than any other department or organization on campus. For the 3 years I have been chair, the Department of Music has been the catalyst to whatever spirit and excitement this university has had, and has now. We are more than pleased to commit to a continuing schedule of activities that serves the university.

Aquatic Center:

To the Editor:

I would like to commend Jon Moss for the excellent journalism used in the article about the Aquatic Center at the North Miami Campus. The article has definitely generated some interest and enthusiasm which will increase the use of the facilities.

I will keep in touch and keep the Sunblazer informed of special programs and services that we anticipate we can fulfill.

I appreciate your support and hope that we can get a program going with the interfraternity council.

Video tour visits FIU

"Club Coca-Cola"™, a highly sophisticated touring video dance club featuring the nation's hottest music and video hits, comes to the UH Forum at Florida International University for one night only, March 31st at 9:30 pm.

Admission is $5.00. Tickets are available in UH 211, and all proceeds will benefit Special Olympics.

Billed as the world's greatest touring video dance club, "Club Coca-Cola"™ features an incomparable selection of music videos as performed by today's hottest music stars, including the Police, Genesis, Run DMC, Whitney Houston, Bon Jovi, U2, Aretha Franklin, Duran Duran, Billy Idol, and the Art of Noise.

A 200 square-foot screen captures all the video action, with Max Headroom, the international television superstar, making special video appearances. The fast-paced evening also includes a dynamic concert-style sound system by Ramsa and Panasonic as well as an array of special effects which includes a super strobe and other high-tech lighting designs.

The tour, launched in early October, has been a huge success. Coca Cola USA officials estimate that more than 500,000 students at 700 campuses across the country—plus military personnel along with their families and friends at selected U.S. bases—will have boogied to the music before the end of the year.

Celebrating its 20th anniversary in 1988, Special Olympics is the world's largest program of year-round sports training and competition for mentally retarded children and other handicapped athletes ages eight and up. The organization, now established in 70 countries around the world, fosters interaction and friend-

This week's question:

Should the students' financial contribution to FPIRG be by negative option as it is now, or should it be by positive check-off?

"I believe that the negative option should not be changed. It's a good cause."

-Jeannie Fernandez
Elementary Education major

"The FPIRG negative option should stay the way it is. Students have the choice to turn it down. It is like the $1 donation to the presidential campaign fund on the federal tax return. The money FPIRG gets now will be squandered by SGA on something else if FPIRG doesn't receive it."

-Joe Infantino
Hospitality/Finance major

"Although I sympathize with FPIRG and what they are trying to accomplish, I don't think a student should be penalized for his failure to remember to initial a one-inch box. Rather, the student should be able to make his/her own free choice. I side with positive option."

-Emiliano Herran
History major

"I think the FPIRG donation should be by positive check-off. The individual should have the choice."

-Mario Ruiz
Political Science major

"I've been trying to decide for a while and both sides of the argument have good reasoning. Nevertheless, I must side with the positive check-off."

-Ralph Estevez
Finance major

"I think FPIRG should be funded by positive option. People who forget to check the box end up paying when they may not want to."

-Mark Benjamin
Accounting major

"I think that students should be allowed to choose for themselves whether they want to donate the money. On the other hand, $2.50 is a little price to pay to help increase awareness of environmental issues which are important to us all."

Phi Delta Theta triumphs in Greek Challenge

JON MOSS
Sunblazer Staff Writer

Florida International University's Greek organizations competed in the last event of the Greek Challenge last Sunday, March 20th.

The challenge was sponsored by the Greek Council of FIU and included competition in several events over the past month.

Sunday's finale was a tailgate party, with points given for the best beach theme float and baseball banner.

The competition took place next to the FIU baseball field prior to the game against Michigan State.

Phi Delta Theta took top honors by creating a mini-beach complete with sand and lifeguard. Because they had earned the most points throughout the entire competition, the Phi Deltans were also declared Greek Challenge champions.

After the competition, the Greeks headed to the baseball diamond to support the Golden Panther baseball team, who suffered a loss to Michigan State by a score of 10-4. During the seventh inning stretch, the Greek Council presented a check to the Miami Project to Cure Paralysis for $1,495. The money had been raised by the Greek organizations the week prior to the game.

Next week:

Sunblazer Sports will feature the men's and women's tennis teams.

12. The gala opening of the new facility is being planned for October, alongside "The William Tucker Exhibition."

Morgan, Humphreys and the rest of the museum staff are counting on timely completion of the renovation. "If the work is not completed by the end of August we'd have to forfeit an $11,000 exhibition," Humphreys said.

In order to protect against a heavy financial loss due to unforeseen delays, a penalty clause has been written into the bid that will go out to contractors. It states that if the Wadsworth exhibit is postponed or cancelled as a result of construction problems, the contractor will be held responsible for the $11,000 loss. "It's a kind of incentive to get the job done on time," said Humphreys. "It's also our way of protecting ourselves."

KFIU is on the air!

JON MOSS
Sunblazer Staff Writer

With the air room and the news room nearing completion it appears that Florida International University will finally have a radio station of its own.

KFIU has just completed some preliminary on-air testing heard only throughout the UH building of the University Park Campus, and students tuning in are pleased with the results. "It's been a long wait but well worth it," said listener Marcia Monserat. "Just the thought of having our own station to listen to makes me proud."

"I'm really looking forward to being able to listen to my own college radio station," said Ed Santamaria. "I'm getting really tired of trying to tune in to that other college station, which shall remain nameless."

It's time for FIU to be cool. Pop is sap, and disco should be kept in the discotheques," commented Perla Sole.

The disc jockeys are currently being trained for the airwaves and the station seems to have some colorful talent to work with. "They make me feel like watching TV and having a couple of brews," commented Mariela Figueroa.

During the testing period, requests flooded in for bands like the Cure, Smithereens, Clash, Souxie and the Banshees, Talking Heads, Black Flag, and the Sex Pistols. There were also many requests for sixties and early seventies music, including hits by the Doors, Traffic, and the Who.

The radio station's format will be structured according to the College Music Journal (CMJ). The CMJ is the bible of college radio. Throughout the United States most college radio stations follow its format. "We want to be one of the best college stations in the nation, and there is no reason why we can not achieve this status," said Student Government Senate President Tim Benjamin. "We want to keep up with the CMJ and maybe throw a curve at them. That's how you earn respect."
