Ten years ago Alice Cohen and Wesley Wilson approached a number of community and civic organizations, including the First Church of North Miami, to assist in urging the State of Florida to purchase the land surrounding the Arch Creek Natural Bridge. Hundreds of meetings, thousands of telephone calls and tens of thousands of volunteer hours later, the Arch Creek Park is a reality: owned by the State of Florida, run by Dade County, watched over by the Arch Creek Trust.

The First Church of North Miami is proud to be one small part of this massive effort. Over the years, many members of the church have lived on this site and founders of the church have fished from the bridge and picnicked on the banks of the creek. Alas, the bridge is no more, but as with all things in life and in death, the church holds a theology of resurrection and hope.

In an effort to support the reconstruction of the bridge and to celebrate the determination and dedication of some of those community leaders who made this park a reality, the First Church of North Miami calls the community to a day of celebration. "Harps in the Park" is our way of thanking God, thanking those with a vision for this place and thanking you for being a part of our South Florida Community.

Donations for the reconstruction of the bridge may be made to the "Arch Creek Trust - Bridge Fund" and deposited in the box in the museum.
