Born in the midwest, studied one year at Detroit Medical College, two years at the University of Michigan, and six months at the University of Illinois. Studied osteopathy at Kirksville, Mo. and took "a post graduate course" at the Palmer School of Chiropractic. Started practice in Ft. Myers in 1910 as "Osteopath, Homeopath, and Chiropractor" because he couldn't pass the medical boards. He calls himself M.D. but doesn't say where he acquired this degree. Older physicians who knew him in Miami tell me he was considered a quack here. His book cited above is sensational and colorful, if of doubtful truth at times. It does supply some notes on travel conditions, kitchen medicine and surgery and folk remedies - these appear in the chronological file.

He was apparently living in retirement in Ft. Myers in 1971.

Sick report, Ft. Brooke 30 Sept 1846

Loc: Tallahassee area

Ref: Paisley, Clifton: From Cotton to Quail: An Agricultural Chronicle, of Leon County, Florida 1860-1967, University of Florida Press, 1968, p. 77.

"One of the first plantations to move from agriculture to hunting was Live Oak ... purchased... by a Scotsman from Edinburgh, Edmund H. Ronalds. Ronalds took over the plantation in 1887... dying there on March 17, 1895, in his thirty-eighth year. (Headstone, Episcopal Cemetery, Tallahassee)... The plantation... now passed into the habds of Edmund Ronalds' younger brother, Tennent Ronalds. Tennent Ronalds, thirty-six years old when he took over, extended the plantation still further and developed it to the tastes of an enthusiastic sportsman who devoted his entire adult life to leisure. He had been trained as a physician getting the finest medical education available at the University of Edinburgh and at the University of Bonn. But although he always wore the title "Doctor" he never practiced medicine. He built a private golf course on the estate and kept a flock of sheep... to keep the greens and fairways trim... by the time of his death at the age of sixty-four Dr. Ronalds had seen the game plantations become well established in Leon County."
