

On Trail Another Year

The public in Florida, on the east coast and on the west coast, is being informed that in all probability the Tamiami Trail will be completed and in condition for use by the spring of 1924.

Another year to wait for the date to be set forward again, if history of construction of the highway across the Everglades is repeated.

A recent issue of the Fort Myers Tropical News says: "Captain Jaudon is very enthusiastic over the Tamiami Trail." And in making this announcement the Fort Myers paper seems to have found about the only man who is not, in fact, very disgusted over the Tamiami Trail.

From the manner in which this enterprise has "trailed" along for these years, it will always remain, and rightly, a "trail."

But as the work is now said to be within two miles of the Monroe county line in Dade county, and the west end of the highway is receiving some attention, there are yet hopes that some good day or year or age the Tamiami Trail will be completed sufficiently to let cars through.

When those responsible for this highway contract finally decide to complete it, and do so, it will be found to be one of the greatest attractions in Florida for motorists and a practical investment, too, in saving many miles of travel between the gulf and the Atlantic. In the meantime the people wait and pay.
