Planning and Planning of bird haunts in public Parks and private estates a specialty

Dear Mrs. Wilson

I have just read your article in the Tampa Tribune and am sure that every intelligent person in Florida will agree with every thing you say. I hope they will also be willing to do something toward it. It is simply a question of whether we have more intelligent people in the State or more of the other kind.

I have been working for things of this kind all my life and I know how hard it is to convince people that there is anything worth while in the world except money.

Thanks to a gang of the local degenerates that we helped the state Florida has lost attractions that, no amount of money could ever replace and there isn't a doubt that that plan are already made to destroy what is left.

I am working on some books on the history and other natural attractions of Florida for the past four years, had nearly been through the Big Cypress swamp and other tracts farther south and I am sure there is nothing before the public today that means more to the State of Florida than the preservation of these wonderful spots.

I have seen the attractive spots in many parts of the U.S. and Canada, and I have yet to see any thing more fascinating than the wonderlands of Southern Florida. One may see beautiful Mountain scenery, beautiful lakes and various and many other things that please, in nearly all parts of North America, but there is nothing in all the land like the highest form or the best type of Southern Slavery

I don't believe it is the people who are actually against things of this sort that we have to contend with so much as the class of citizens that are indifferent. If we can arouse ^{the better class of} the their slumber it shall be easy to save a few thousand from the eye, the gun or the pen who set fire.

Yours
J. W. M. Dinswell
